

Module Title: IR 472- Europe and Migration

Instructor: Prof. Ayhan Kaya

Level: Undergraduate

Term: Spring 2011

Room: D. Z 40

Time: 09:00- 12:00

Module Description: This course aims to extend the understanding of the key notions of migration, globalisation, diasporas, colonisation, integration and assimilation in contemporary Europe. Europe and Migration as a module also aims at equipping the students with the tools to compare different forms of migration since the antiquity as well as alternative forms of regimes of migrations implemented by different states such as Germany, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Turkey and Britain. The course will also frame the migration related discussions within the European Commission as well as in the individual member states.

Module Structure: The course is divided into four main parts. The first part will outline the theoretical and methodological issues surrounding migration. The second part will give a comparative perspective to the students by focusing on different countries. The third and fourth parts of the course will provide a broader outlook on the issues by focusing on Europe as a whole. The students who successfully complete the course will be awarded a certificate from the European Institute.

Module Outputs: The course aims to create awareness on diversity, tolerance, interculturalism, transnational space, transmigration, cosmopolitan citizenship and European citizenship.

Study Trips

Armenian Patriarchate in Istanbul

Description: This study trip aims to give a concise history of Armenians in Turkey and the challenges they have met so far. The students were instructed about the state of the Armenian communities residing in Turkey as well as their social, political, cultural and economic status here. Mr. Aram Ateşyan, Deputy Patriarch, delivered a speech to the students concerning the Armenian communities in and outside Turkey. We are very much grateful to his support.

Announcements

Dear Collegues,

I am glad to inform you that my new book is now out from Palgrave MacMillan: ISLAM, MIGRATION AND INTEGRATION: The Age of Securitization. Deriving from my own qualitative and quantitative research in Germany, France, Belgium and the Netherlands, I discussed the ways in which Muslims have been stigmatized especially after 9/11. All the best.

ISLAM, MIGRATION AND INTEGRATION: The Age of Securitization

Ayhan Kaya

Preface

I have always perceived Migration Studies as an interdisciplinary field providing me with the tools to scrutinize not only the life worlds of immigrants and their descendants, but also the ways in which the receiving countries have politically, socially, culturally, economically and legally changed over time vis-a-vis immigrant origin populations. This is why I have preferred to understand the transformation of the modern nation-state through the lens of Migration Studies. And I have chosen to try to grasp the changing habitats of meaning of migrants and minorities in order to actually comprehend majority societies. Although this book seems to be on Muslim origin migrants living in the West, it is actually not. This book is about the changing face of the nation-state in Germany, France, Belgium and the Netherlands at a time distinguished with (marked by) securitization, prudentialism, Islamophobia and violence. I claim that the fear of migrants and Muslims prevalent in the West cannot have material sources; it is in fact a constructed and fabricated fear, serving the interests of nation-states which are no longer equipped with the tools to redistribute justice and peace relatively equally. Migration has for a long time been a source of content and happiness for the West. But now it is seen as a source of instability and insecurity, or it is portrayed as such by parochial political elites as a form of governmentality to maintain their power. I have come to the conclusion that most of the controversies and debates on migration have essentially been designed to conceal the most persistent structural problems leading to inequality, poverty and discrimination. I also find it very worrying to see that migration is being very disapprovingly perceived at a time when net migration is becoming even (-) minus in most of the European Union countries.

This book has written itself over the years in so many different places and occasions. Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, New York, London, Florence, Istanbul, Diyarbakir, Mersin, Bairut, Jerusalem, Nalchick and so on. Every single individual I met in the fieldworks, interviews, conferences, workshops and lectures have taught me a lot. All these journeys have given me the chance to learn from the act of migrating and travelling. I believe that the act of migration was my own Ithaca which gave me a "marvellous journey", and I know that "without her I wouldn't have set out" as the prominent Greek poet Constantin P. Cavafy once said in his poem "Ithaca". The whole journey was "full of adventure" and "full of discovery"...

Description This work explores contemporary debates on migration and integration, focussing on Euro-Muslims. It critically engages with republicanist and multiculturalist policies of integration and claims that integration means more than cultural and linguistic assimilation of migrant communities.
